X-RAY CHEST

REPORT:

There is a background of pulmonary emphysematous change as reflected by hyperinflated lungs. There is prominence of pulmonary markings as well. There is slightly raised left hemidiaphragm with associated minor left basal subsegmental atelectatic change. With the history of ongoing left sided chest pain, I would suggest further evaluation with CT scan of chest to exclude any concerning lesion at the left lung base. There is a background of decreased bone density and thoracic spine degenerative changes as well.
