Dear Dr Ong,

I caught up with Luke and his wife in my rooms today. They were sent along just to review Luke's current fertility scenario, given that he had symptoms of urethritis back in Sydney some years ago.

Essentially, he's got a very impressive ejaculate. All parameters for sperm numbers, concentration, motility and morphology are well above normal range and his DNA fragmentation is well within the normal range. I'm comfortable that there are no further interventions, either pharmacological or surgical, that would benefit his ejaculate.

On examination, he's normally masculinised with good volume testis and no obvious varicocele on valsalva manoeuvre. On one ejaculate only, there were some elevated white cells, but in the two subsequent tests, there were no white cells. It's not uncommon in a masturbation sample to have low levels of white cells.

At this stage, I would look forward to receiving correspondence on how this couple go with your advanced techniques. Luke remains on a number of supplemental therapies, all of which can only be beneficial. I wish them well.

Kind regards,
Dr Glen Wood
